Dear Linus:

I wanted to reach you by phone this afternoon, but your answering service tells me you will not be in your office. If the Pan Air strike is settled, I will be off to Asia tonight, so this is the best way to reach you before I go.

The immigration authorities called [REDACTED] for an interview (she is a German citizen, on an immigrant visa), and questioned her about her illness. It seems that she is liable for deportation if it can be shown that her illness is recurrent. They talked her into signing a document which would authorize a release of her records to immigration from Queen's Hospital.

She was told that if she became ill again she would be deported, if members of her family (now in Hawaii) were in Germany to receive her. Those members, a mother and sister, do plan to return to Germany after another year or so.

[REDACTED] is still living with us. She is now working as a nurse at Leahi Hospital, and just holding on.

We would be grateful if you could advise us on how we should proceed. We wonder how specific the records are on two counts, first, the recurrence of her illness, and second, the role of another alien. We have disassociated ourselves with the latter individual, but we have not as yet been successful in transferring his visa sponsorship, so more than a concern about [REDACTED]'s welfare is involved here.

Please call me at home Tomorrow, Friday, at 960-666, and if I am not at home, please talk to Anne, and give her your thoughts on the subject. Thanks very much for your interest and concern.

Yours,

Robert Aitken
